Baking Day

On Saturday morning, Jade put on her apron and waited by the kitchen window. Her friend Mateo was coming over to bake bread. They had practiced the steps with Jade's grandma last week, and today they wanted to try it on their own.

Mateo arrived with a small bag of flour. Jade measured the warm water while Mateo stirred in the yeast. "It smells like the bakery on Main Street," Mateo said, laughing as the dough stuck to his fingers.

They took turns kneading the dough on the counter. Jade's dad set a timer for one hour so the dough could rise. While they waited, the two friends washed the bowls and drew funny faces on the baking sheet with leftover flour.

When the timer rang, the dough had doubled in size. They shaped it into a round loaf and slid it into the hot oven. Twenty minutes later, the kitchen smelled warm and sweet. Jade's dad cut two thick slices. Mateo grinned. "Next Saturday," he said, "let's bake cookies."
